Eight students from Montana Tech's Network Technology Program won first place recently in the North Central Regional Collegiate Cyber Defense Competition.

Pete Votapka of Libby and seven other members of the student organization, the CCCD Club, will head this month to the National Collegiate Cyber Defense Competition in San Antonio, Texas.

The regional competition, which took place at Dakota State University in Madison, S.D., focused on the operational aspect of managing and protecting existing "commercial" network infrastructures.

"Our students performed superbly in the competition which tested their knowledge and skills involving major computer networks," said Jim Freebourn, Network Technology instructor and team adviser. "Now they have an opportunity to test themselves on a national level. They will also have great opportunities to network with industry professionals."

Along with Votapka, other members competing include James Burke of Butte, Matt Dunbar of Hamilton, Robert Fitzgerald of Chicago, Ill., Patrick Guinard of Denver, Colo., Cory Mus of Butte, Erik Ogren of Powell, Wyo., and Jody Rigby of Hamilton.
